

GREENPEACE

For the first time, genetically modified (GM) food crops are being grown in Australia, posing potential risks to the environment and human health.

However, there is currently no way for shoppers to ensure that their groceries are GM free, as labelling is not required for most products containing GM ingredients. Australians want GM food labelled for health, environmental and ethical reasons.

SIGN THE PETITION TO THE FEDERAL MINISTER FOR HEALTH AND AGEING, THE HONOURABLE NICOLA ROXON:

Dear Minister.

We, the undersigned, call on the Federal Government, to keep its promises and to protect public health and consumer choice by introducing, and strictly enforcing, legislation to ensure that:

- GM crops are only approved if they are proven to be safe 'beyond reasonable doubt' using evidence from independent, long-term, published studies measuring indicators relevant to human health.
- All GM foods are clearly labelled, including highly processed products such as oils, starches and sugars from GM crops; and meat, milk, cheese and eggs from animals fed GM feed.
